I'm sharing which paints are best for the how to paint fabric so that it remains soft and washable, and 7 of my favorite DIY painted fabric designs. I think paint is magic stuff. Paint is such a quick and easy way to transform pretty much anything: plastic, metal, wood, floors, walls, ceilings. And yes, fabric, too. Fabric of painting opens up a whole world of DIY possibilities. Instead of looking for and looking for exactly the right fabric, you can just alone. Fabric painting is an easy, inexpensive way to upgrade your décor. And surprisingly, painted fabric doesn't have to feel crunchy, stiff, or franky, like paint at all. Over the years I have painted curtains, shirts, pillow covers, even a down cover. And while there are some tricks you need to know, for the most part it's really quite easy. Of course, this does not mean that all my attempts at painted fabric have been a huge success. One of my first attempts was a couple of painted striped curtains for my son's nursery. I used primers and two latex paint coats just like I was painting a wall or a piece of furniture. I was able to get perfect and sharp straight lines for my stripes and the curtains looked nice. But unfortunately, they felt terrible to the touch - stiff and oil slick like vinyl, not exactly as you want it tends to feel. Fortunately since they were tents, no one has ever touched them; still was a learning experience - painting fabric is definitely not the same as painting walls! From that first painted tent project years ago, I learned a lot about things to do and not to do about fabric painting and how to paint fabric so that it feels as good as it sounds. There are several good options for fabric paint, each with its own pros and cons. Acrylic paint - Medium and a half fabric acrylic paint are available in any craft shop in pretty much any color you can imagine. They are usually available in small bottles and are very cheap. It is enough to mix the paint, fabric support and water together, follow the instructions on the specific fabric support for the correct quantities of each. This is my favorite method for most projects because you can find absolutely any color you want, it is inexpensive, and the painted fabric is very soft to the touch. The disadvantage of this method is that the addition of the fabric medium tends to dilute the color a little, so this method may not be the best if you want very vibrant and saturated colors. Fabric Paint You can also buy paint specifically for fabric. It is basically like buying paint with the fabric medium already added. I used fabric paint several times and it also gives a nice soft finish. The main disadvantage of fabric paint is simply that it is available a very limited range of colors and generally costs a little more. Gypsum paint Most plaster paints are also large for painting fabric. You may need to stir in some water before thinning the paint. Gypsum paints tend to absorb fabric fibers well rather than simply sitting on top as latex paint or other paints without any added fabric means. I experienced different types of gypsum paint on fabric fabric have not yet used it for many complete projects. Since gypsum paint absorbs well into the fabric, it is much more difficult to use in a controlled way (with a stencil, for strips, etc.). Paint tends to look more natural as a dye, but it also tends to be more unpredictable and spreads easily. This makes chalk paint a great choice for big projects like painting upholstered furniture. Annie Sloan Chalk Paint, Dixie Belle paint and DIY paint are all highly recommended for painting painting. Fabric Dye You can also use fabric dyes to paint fabric. I particularly like these simple sets of tie dyes and have used them several times for various projects. They give a large, soft, washable finish, but like gypsum paint, dye can be a bit unpredictable. Fabric dyes are great for freestyle, abstract designs and solid colored fabrics. Be careful though, working with the dye can become very messy and the dye can stain the hands as well as the working surface. Wearing gloves and protecting the area where you work is essential. Fabric markers Fabric markers are another option if you want a hand or doodled design for your fabric. These could also work well for stenciling. Fabric markers are easy to use and easy to control for smaller projects, but run out too quickly for large projects. Methods for fabric painting There are a lot of different methods of painting fabric. My favorite is the simplest - just use a brush! But there are plenty of other ways to be creative when painting fabric. Use a brush - small artists' brushes are great for more intricate designs, chip brushes work well for larger areas Use stencils to create a drawing freezer paper stencils are the absolute best for fabric! Use foam stamps to add a drawing or write words Use a small foam roller to paint large areas Use painter's ribbon to create FAVORITE Painted Fabric DIY strips as I said, I have painted fabric quite a few times over the years for all kinds of projects. I painted an outdoor sofa, a padded headboard, a down cover, curtains, clothes and a nice pair of pillow covers in all kinds of styles and designs from shadows to watercolor typography.
